20.1 The Intellectual Property (IP) Copyright Law was passed by the Singapore Parliament on 16 November 2004 and is enforced from 1 January 2005. According to the law, any willful copyright infringement by a person or company, where the extent of infringement is significant and and/or where it is to obtain a commercial advantage, is considered a criminal offence and will be prosecuted in a Court of Law.

20.2 The law is very strict on infringement of copyright and deals with offences under three main categories:

20.2.1 Doing acts which are a violation of copyright contained in any works;

20.2.2 Importing for sale or hire of any product of works is in violation of the provisions of the Copyright Act;

20.2.3 Selling or having other dealings with products or works which are a violation of the Copyright Act.

20.3 Copyright infringement includes the use of unlicensed or pirated software. Under-licensing is also classified as copyright infringement. Unlicensed and/or pirated software media and compact discs (including audio and video discs) cannot be brought into SRC as they are in breach of the Copyright Act. 'Burnt' or compiled music from CDs or MP3 files downloaded from the Internet are not allowed to be brought to SRC.
